Testimonials

How we made an impression on the Foreign Minister

It was election month somewhere in South Asia. The request came from the Foreign Minister's Office: a 700-page case-bound compilation of keynote foreign policy speeches and a similar 700-page publication on disarmament – 1500 copies of each book. The day after the election, the Minister would like to present the President-elect with advance copies of these books. They would courier as much finished artwork as can be made ready in a week before the election. We accepted the challenge and our presses prepared to roll.

There is nothing extraordinary about fulfilling these orders. They are just examples of what we expect to come through our door any day of the week, election or no election. That's in addition to the day-to-day load of other books, brochures, posters, newsletters – the sort of thing you'd expect to see in print.
